Program Distribution

The program is organized as a dense, layered system that reinforces the museum’s mission of presenting media as an immersive and continuous field with a sequence of varied worlds. Public-facing spaces such as the foyer, theater, and immersive worlds are interwoven with infrastructural elements like the data center, research offices, and mechanical systems, allowing visitors to experience both the production and consumption of media simultaneously. Circulation is treated as an active spatial layer, stitching together these volumes through extended corridors and connections that reveal shifting relationships between programs.
